Contact Us; Privacy Policy; Charter of Contract: Chapter Two As under the Statute, every contract that is not specifically authorized by the charter of the United States shall be void, except such as are specifically authorized by it. This to me means that in the absence of a contract authorized by the constitution or statute, it shall be void. We are here concerned with a mere commercial or business contract, not a contract for the performance of a governmental duty or obligation, which the law recognizes as different in its nature. If in the contract a term is not given and a term is not essential to the contract, a court may supply one on the part of the parties, if there is reason to suppose that they would have made one, if it had been in their minds, and to the extent of the term that the parties may have agreed upon. As an example: A says to B, that he will pay him B's commission on a certain amount of cotton, if he can get as much as 20 cents a pound, and B says to A, that if he can get 20 cents a pound he will take it. The intention of A is not disclosed, but A takes 20 cents a pound. B, having no intention disclosed to him, takes 20 cents a pound. A may say to B, that he will give him the commission if he gets 15 cents a pound, and B says that if he gets 15 cents he will take it, and this the charter does not authorize. The charter does not authorize the payment of a commission, but it does authorize the employment of the lawyer, and the intention of A is disclosed. The charter would authorize the payment of a commission, if A and B had not had an understanding that he would give B a commission if he got 15 cents a pound, or if B and A had not agreed that he would take 15 cents a pound. The charter would not authorize a commission if the parties had agreed that the commission was to be paid, even though A might not have had any idea of paying a commission. Even in the first instance the charter does not authorize the payment of a commission, but it does authorize the employment of a lawyer and the fixing of the amount of his commission. The charter does not authorize the lawyer's employment, but it does authorize the fixing of his commission, and the amount fixed is to be paid to him or the one to whom
